Research

Activities 2011

Kit Johnstone Tyabandha, Ph.D.

I settled down in Glasgow, Scotland, after having experienced exploits from some traffickers back since 1990, then came across and been used by others of those from 1995. In good faith I had been used by the latter since that date until I came to realise that they may have murdered one of the women I knew, and also some other people; so I stopped associating with them at the end of 2009. Walking Wales, Scotland and Ireland in 2010 I noticed that I had been followed in a manner of someone being hunted by slave hunters. They had caused my departure from some of my Ph.D. projects in the past, they had also caused my leaving two academic activities at two different universities in Thailand. Now they try to prevent me from getting an academic job, and from doing any research. They did this latter by threatening to plagiarise my works, and had been already variously plagiarising them.

The year 2011 had not been particularly active regarding research. I was trying to set going again a research for my commitment to the Japanese government. I wanted to try to do this in Language Engineering instead of in Control Systems. At this point I still had not been able to reach in any way researchers in Japan whom I knew. I had no idea whereto to submit a Ph.D. thesis to Japan.

I searched for academic positions, in November to Aberdeen (1215429), Cardiff (2011/0122), Glasgow (850) (856) (875), Imperial College (EN20110135BD) (NS2011191SA), Kent (STM0236), Manchester (EPS/12728), Open University (7519), Oxford (BK/11/014) and Sheffield (UOS003510). At this time I had kept few descriptive records of the details of these. Hopefully I would be able to give more account on them, together with describing more activities, when I came round to update this section.

I did actities at some Christian organisations in Glasgow. At one of these I had been considered a resident artist, even though the following year when I warned them about the slave hunters who followed me to their establishment they later on went back on their word and said that I was considered neither an artist nor a volunteer. At another there were courses organised in conjunction with Stow College, which I went along but left for good when I became convinced that the lecturer who had her doctorate degree from University of Manchester really believed that plagiarism was no crime.

These slave hunters, based presumably in Oldham, probably had some hand in the turmoil in Thai politics now and during the past decade. They probably were behind my father in Jyangmhaĭ becoming bedridden, and of his murder the following year.

©2014, KJT Johnstone Tyabandha, PhD, 21^{th} May, 2014